SUMMARY OF INFORMATION

SG1A

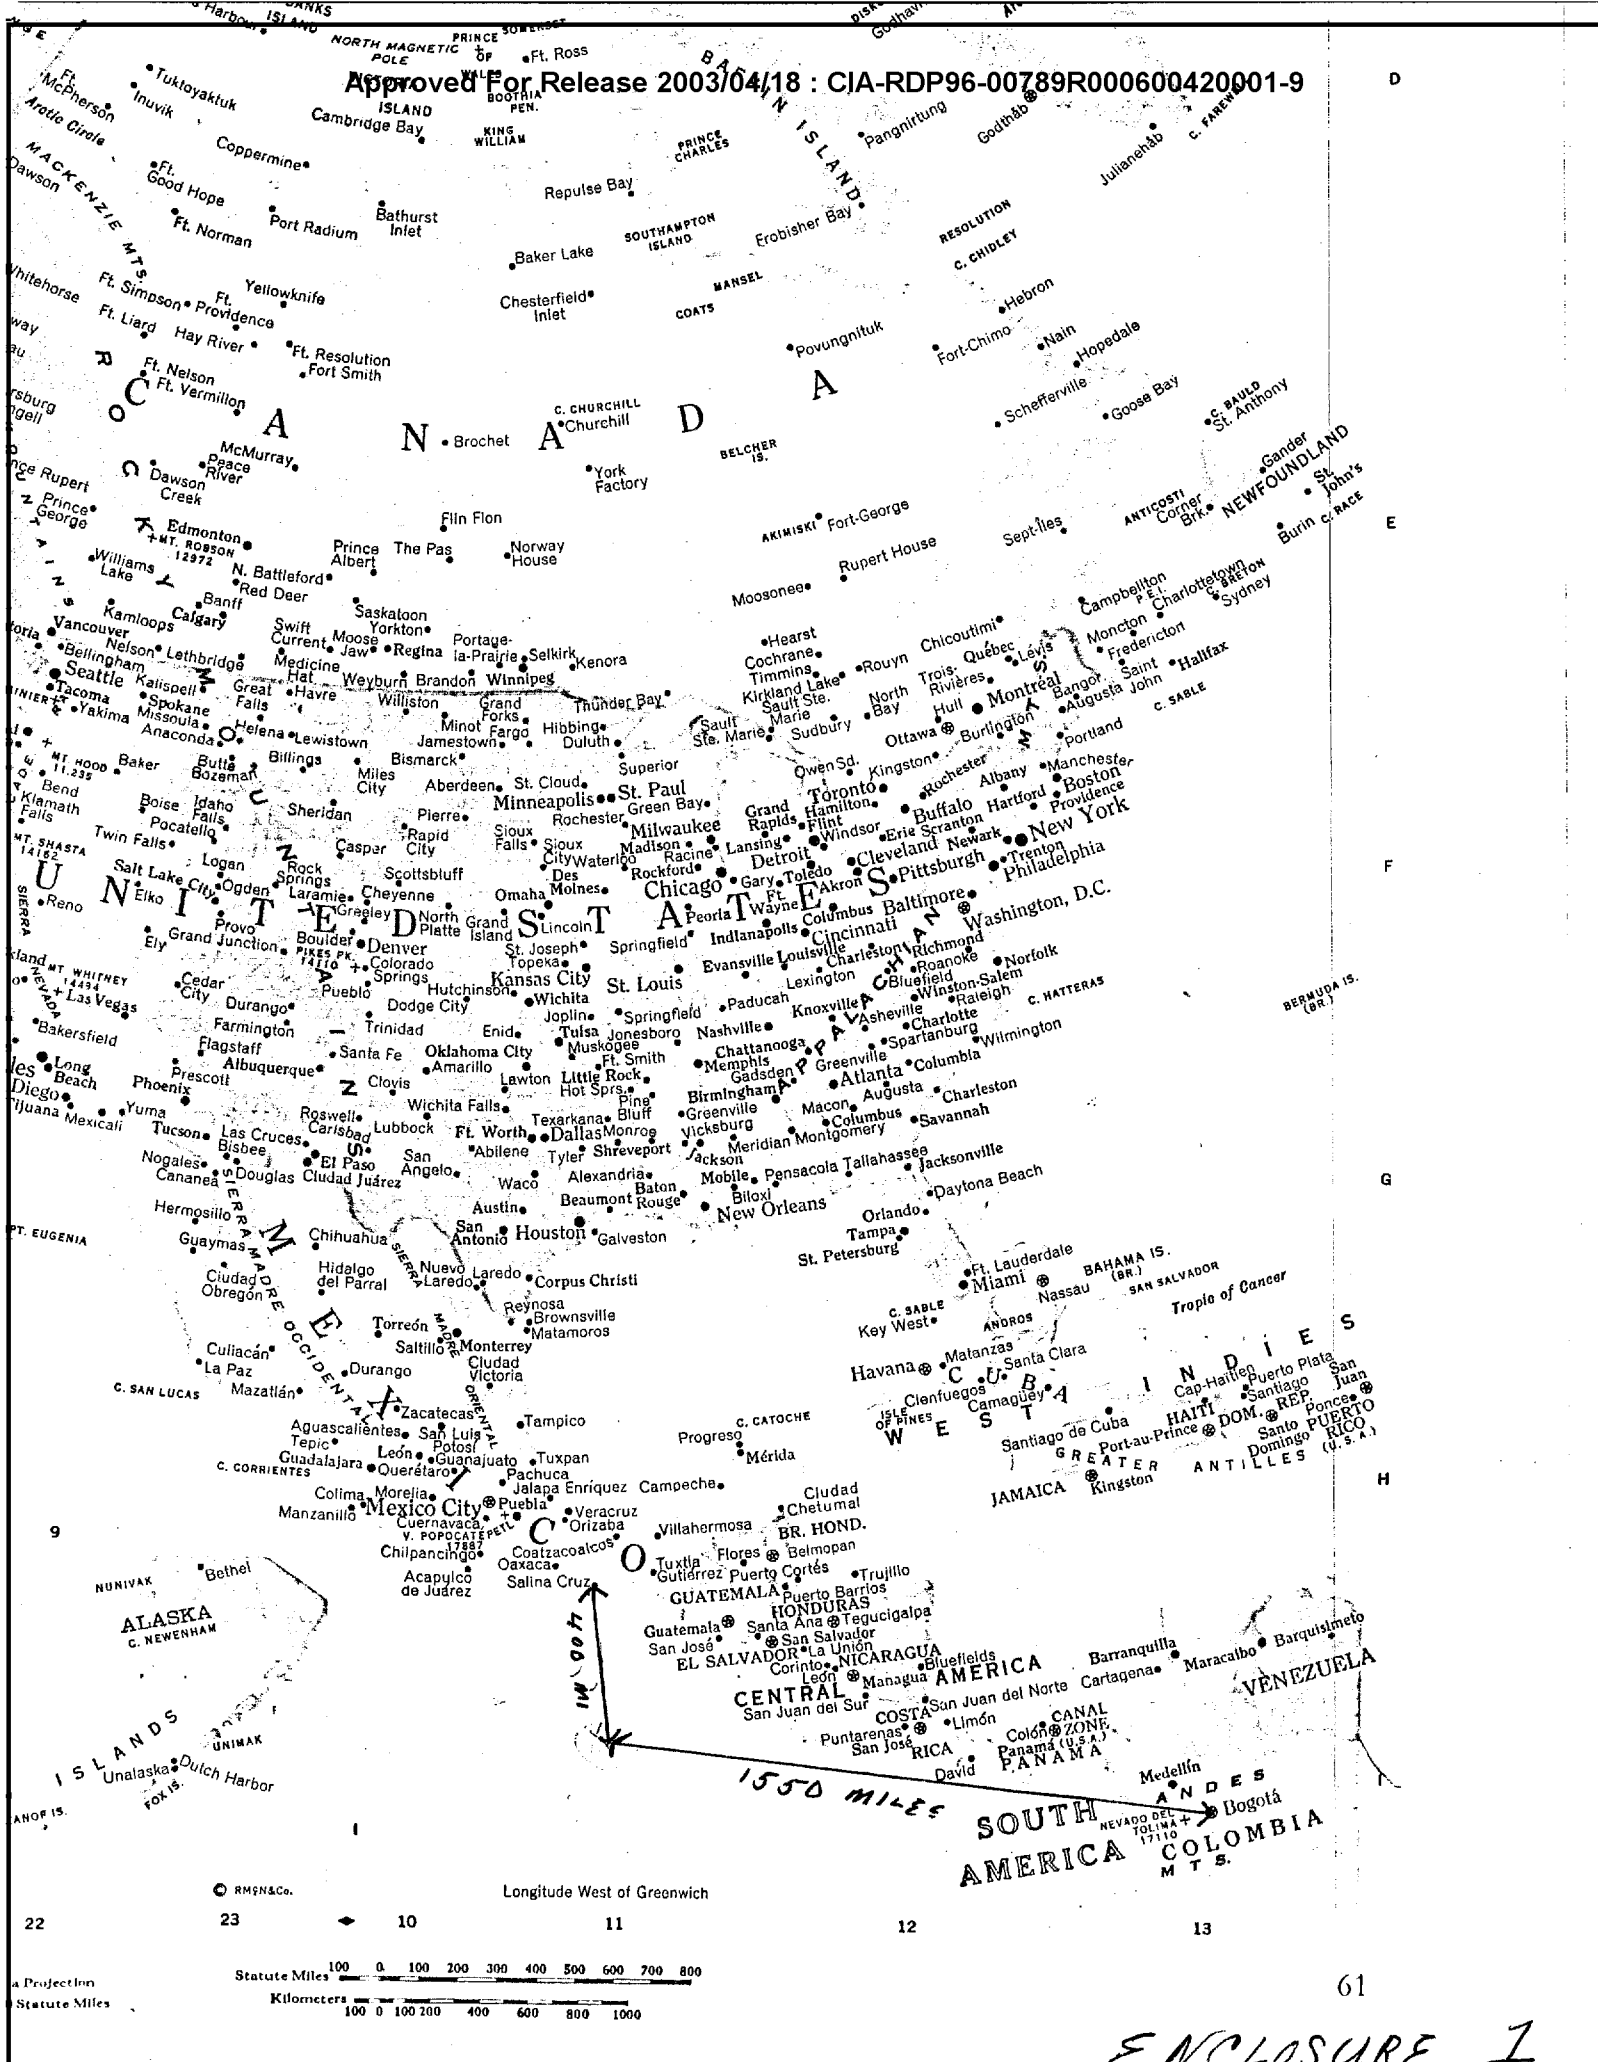

The sailed from the area of Houma, LA, across the Panama Canal to the Pacific Basin and headed for a port west of the capital city of Bogota, Columbia.

The vessel is currently carrying a "big load" of cocaine obtained from Columbia. The bulk of the "big load" is stowed in the hold located amidship next to a toilet. The cocaine is stored in white cellophane bags packaged in brown, square-shaped packages bearing the words phonetically indicated as "days/hays". A relatively smaller amount of drugs to include cocaine is stored in a steward's cabin.

The name "Luella/Lowell/Louella" phonetically surfaced as that of a passenger's name who is somehow knowledgeable of the presence of the cocaine aboard ship.

The vessel is currently located at a point estimated as being about 1550 miles west of Bogota, Columbia, and about 400 miles south of Salina Cruz, Mexico. [The vessel's current location appeared to be the issue of utmost importance to the customer at this time].

The vessel was originally destined to sail towards the west coast of the US; however, a change in plans appears likely. The vessel may very well implement an alternate plan that will bring it to the southeast coast of the US. St Augustine surfaced as a possible, ultimate destination.
